FAMILY MEALS

A TIME TO NOURISH AND CONNECT

Fast, Faster, Fastest. Does that describe the speed at which you are living your life? If so, (and even if not) the simple family meals featured in this issue may help you to get out of the fast food lane and into more family mealtime. This issue is dedicated to the old family tradition of eating meals together. We've included ideas, meal plans and recipes to get you started. There's even a shopping list you can download and individualize for your family. With so many benefits, it is a great time to reclaim this tradition for your family.

The research supports the positive effects that seem intuitive about family mealtime. Families eating regular meals together find:

- People eat more nutritiously; choosing more fruits, vegetables, dairy foods and whole grains.
- Teens have better grades and are less likely to smoke, drink alcohol, or use drugs.
- Family communication improves.
- Family traditions are strengthened.
- Childhood obesity decreases.
- Children have improved character and social development.

Sounds great, but how do you balance eating family meals together with parents' busy schedules and children's activities? Check out these ideas on the next few pages and make family meals a priority. It's well worth the effort.

- Check schedules and plan for family meal times. It doesn't have to be dinner. How about breakfast or a weekend brunch? Meals can be eaten at home or at a restaurant. The important thing is to spend time together.
- Plan menus ahead. Choose which days to cook and which days to pull something from the freezer based upon other obligations. Shop for the week's worth of groceries at one time. Keep it simple. You may want to plan a month's worth of menus at a time and then repeat.
- Make it quick. Use crock-pots, frozen meal kits, and simple recipes to keep meals from becoming a major production. Prep food ahead if possible. Keep your pantry well stocked so you have everything to whip up a nutritious meal. Do not get in the habit of fixing a different meal for each family member. If your picky eater does not like what you are having—consider allowing him to have an alternative two times each week.

- Turn off cell phones, TVs, radios and other distractions. The idea is to connect with each other.
- Keep conflict and discipline away from the dinner table. Encourage each family member to contribute polite conversation. Listen to thoughts and views. Get to know what others in your family think about a variety of topics.
- Get every family member involved in some aspect of the meal from planning, shopping, cooking, to setting the table or doing the dishes.

"So many people walk around with a meaningless life. They seem half-asleep, even when they're busy doing things they think are important. This is because they're chasing the wrong things. The way you get meaning into your life is to devote yourself to loving others, devote yourself to your community around you, and devote yourself to creating something that gives you purpose and meaning."

CONSIDERING SURGERY?

Having bariatric surgery is a major life-changing event. Thinking about the support that you will need and getting it lined up ahead of time will ease the transition after surgery. In addition to your family and friends, be sure to ask others at your support group, on the Barix Clinics Store Message Board, through the Barix Buddy system what types of support were most helpful to them after surgery. There's nothing like the help of a friend that's been there.

Emotional Support—It is normal to experience a variety of feelings and emotions after surgery. While most patients feel hope, optimism and confidence about the active new life they will build; sometimes there can be feelings of anxiety or irritability. Support and encouragement from friends and family can make a world of difference. Those that really care about you will want you to be healthy and happy. They are usually willing to do whatever they can to help you reach your weight goal. However, they may not know how to best support your efforts. You will need to let them know how they can help.

Activity Support—Having an activity partner may be more motivational than going solo. Think about whom you can enlist and get started working out together before surgery if possible. Think about what type of activities you will do. Check out the local YMCA, health club, community education programs, or other fitness opportunities. If you plan to exercise at home, watch for sales on equipment, exercise videos or small hand weights.

Food Support—Start to read labels, looking for the sugar, fat and protein content of foods, while grocery shopping. Ask for the nutrition information at the fast food outlets that you visit and begin to make healthier choices. Get your family and friends on board by trying new sugar free, low calorie options. Clean out your kitchen getting rid of sugar laden foods, and drinks.

Workplace Support—Enlist the help of those that you work with to have sugar free treats for workplace celebrations or decorate workstations rather than celebrating with the traditional cake. Petition for healthier food options in the cafeteria and vending areas or refrigerators and microwaves to bring lunches from home.

Family Support—In many cases, you will educate your family and friends about bariatric surgery. They will need to know that the surgery is not magic; it is a valuable tool for successful weight loss and maintenance. They can help you to make the healthful lifestyle changes. So many times the entire family improves their healthful habits when one person has bariatric surgery. Your family can look forward to an increased level of energy and sense of confidence. Let your family know about the changes they can expect in your eating and exercise habits and how they can help.

IT WORKED FOR ME

Submitted by Kathryn W.

There are many small things that you don't think of when you start your weight loss journey. The first few weeks you concentrate on nutrition and watching the pounds fall off. Then comes that day that you realize that all and I mean all of your clothes are way too big. As a professional that is required to wear business attire, it became a daily struggle to put outfits together on a limited budget. My new body was swimming in 3X tops.

One day I was near a Salvation Army store and threw caution to the wind and walked in. Was I in for a shock! Hidden among the racks and racks and racks of color coordinated clothes were gems for just pennies. I have walked out of the store with designer label suits in perfect condition for under $10.00. Brand new items with the tags still on can be found on every rack. Recently, I presented a paper before more than 200 of my peers dressed in my clothes from my new favorite store; all for $12.35, two piece suit, designer silk blouse, chain belt and trendy pin. I did have to pay full price for the shoes, even my feet have changed sizes.

The best part is when I am ready for the next size down, which is becoming a monthly event, I just bring back the clothes I bought and donate them. You can find allowable deductions on the web at the IRS.gov site.

You don't have to go broke keeping up with your ever changing wardrobe, just be creative where you purchase items. See you at the Bariatric Ball in my $16.00 gown.
